- Program: PGDM-PT 2010-13
- Academic Year and Term: 2012-13, Term VII
- Course Description: In the era of increased globalization, the business borders are increasingly being redefined for the manager. Mobility of capital is now matched with similar mobility of human resources. This course will provide the students to explore and understand the various dimensions of HRM as practiced by managers of multinational enterprises (MNEs) in a globalized economy.
Irrespective of whether the student is a practicing HR manager or a functional manager, this course will provide the necessary applied skill to the student to understand the core issues of international business strategy and structure, cross-cultural business behavior, international staffing approaches, people development in the global era, expatriation and repatriation of global employees, international compensation and rewards and international industrial relations.
This course is therefore, meant for any manager who aspires to have a global career in the immediate future.
- Course Objectives: The objective of this course is to develop the professional and analytical skills of participating students in the areas of international human resource management. Business managers require skills, knowledge and strategies for effective functioning in the global marketplace. This course develops these areas in managing the important area of international human resources. As an advanced course, this course is most suitable for those students who have completed an introductory course in human resource management, and who have some basic understanding of how national culture and the context of the international environment affect business. Students will benefit from understanding how to effectively manage, recruit, select, develop and reward people working in global organizations. This course provides an opportunity to students to explore international dimensions of the core aspects of human resource management, such as linkages with international business strategy and structure, recruitment, compensation and reward management, training and development, performance management, and industrial relations.

Learning Outcomes: By the end of this course, students will be able to demonstrate:

1. An in depth understanding of the mechanisms of the international context, and culture specifically, effect the core functions of human resource management in the globalized economy
2. An ability to effectively analyze international human resource management problems
3. An ability develop appropriate strategies to solve problems in the context of international management
4. Competence in the basic cross-cultural skills necessary for effective international human resource management.
